The parable of the Good Samaritan is recounted only by the lawyer's question: "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" and is part of a longer exposition on the two great commandments. This narrative explains the ramifications of loving one's neighbor as oneself: next week's Gospel about Mary and Martha (10:38-42) interprets the command to love God with one's whole heart, being, strength and mind. Based on a series of questions, answers and counter-questions, this dialogue between Jesus and the lawyer illustrates Christian commitment as a challenge that questions traditional value and shatters stereotypical modes of behavior while offering anew and radical alternative— a life motivated not by law but by law.

As for the lawyer's initial question about eternal life, contemporary believers should keep in mind his Jewish background and realize that he was, in effect, asking: "What must I do to be a part of the age of the messiah?" or "What must I do to belong to God's people?" Jesus' response was a combination of two texts, Deuteronomy 6:5 and Leviticus 19:18. Jesus was not unique in combining these two precepts, but was unique in correlating the two as having equal importance.

Moreover, Jesus expanded the Jewish notion of "neighbor." Traditionally it referred to one's fellow countrymen, but Jesus broadened it to include all people, as is illustrated in the compassion of the Samaritan. It should be noted that a Jewish audience would not have been surprised or shocked that the Levite and priest passed by the robbed man who was beaten and left for dead. In fact, they were observing the laws regarding ritual purity (Num 9:11–19; Lev 21:1-3, 10-11). More shocking was the fact that the virtuous character in Jesus' parable was a Samaritan. Regarded by the Jews as heretics and schismatics, Samaritans were Descendants of Jews who had intermarried with Assyrians when they defeated the Northern Kingdom in 722 B.C.E. Because of this the Samaritans were considered useless sinners, and the Jews went out of their way to avoid them.

Knowing all this Jesus told his parable and asked the scholar of the law, "Which of these...was neighbor to the robbers' victim?" How much strength must it have cost the lawyer to answer honestly! Jesus was redefining the law and insisting that those who claim to love God must love their neighbor as themselves. Neighbor would no longer be determined in terms of territorial proximity or shared nationality, but in terms of benevolence and need. "Neighborliness is not a quality of other people; it is simply their claim on ourselves. We have literally no time to sit down and ask ourselves whether so-and-so is our neighbor or not. We must get into action and obey; we must behave like a neighbor to him" (Dietrich Bonhoeffer, A Testament to Freedom, Harper San Francisco 1990).
