July 24
17th Sunday in Ordinary Times

“And I tell you, ask and you will receive; seek and you will find; knock and the door will be opened to you.”
Luke 11:10

July 24, 2016
17th Sunday in Ordinary Times
Luke 11:1-13

Luke's version of how Jesus taught the disciples to pray differs considerably from Matthew's. Instead of including this teaching in the Sermon on the Mount, Luke holds it for the dramatic second half of the Gospel when Jesus and the disciples are headed for Jerusalem. That alone adds to the intensity of the prayer.

Luke says that Jesus taught this prayer in response to his disciples' request. Typically, teachers would give their followers distinctive prayers and practices to signify their discipleship. In the case of teaching them this prayer, Jesus was letting them in on his spirituality, his intimate relationship to God. For that reason this prayer has always held a unique place of honor for Christians, so much so that the early converts were not allowed to know it until after they had been tested and received baptism. Only with the they hope to enter so deeply into Jesus' own relationship with the Father.

When we are invited to pray in this way, we invited to participate in the relationship between the Father begin with awe at God's greatness: "Hallowed be your name." Then we step toward submission "Your kingdom come." Having begun with adoration and obedience, we go on to plead for mercy on our frailty. Thus we ask for the bread "of the morrow," the bread that sustains us as creatures made of body and soul who long for God's reign. Begin mere humans and knowing that we cannot measure up to a standard of perfection, we ask for forgiveness. Then we admit that we can only dare to ask pardon if we are willing to bestow it on others. When this part of the prayer is actualized in our lives we begin to live a rhythm of giving and receiving forgiveness, and in those blessed moments of being led in the dance of grace, we experience the kind of life the kingdom promises. Finally, all too aware of our frailty, we ask, as did Jesus, to let the cup of trial pass us by. If this petition is not granted, at least, like Christ we will be able to count on God's grace as more powerful than the wiles of any foe. Altogether, what we call the Lord's Prayer is an invitation to share Christ's intimacy with the Father; it is a plea for union with God and with one another.

After giving the disciples this prayer, Jesus went on to teach them to live a prayerful life. Except for hallowing God's name, Jesus teaches less about the need for worship or church membership than about seeking and finding, asking and receiving.

What can be missed in Jesus' example of the man who wakes up the neighborhood is that the one asking for help stands between someone who has and someone in need. Jesus' first teaching about the prayer of petition presents it as advocacy. That is exemplified in Jesus' prayer "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." This is the prayer of someone whose primary motivation is compassion for others.

The salvific twist in this example is that the praying person makes good on the prayer for the coming of God's kingdom in two interdependent ways. When the praying person disturbs the peace of someone who can resolve the situation, both the person in need and the one who could have perished in selfishness receive what they most need. First he is procuring bread for the needy. Secondly he is saving the sleeper by walking him from spirit-slaying complacency with his privileged abundance. Like Abraham, who questioned the vengeful image of God, this poor but persistent person is willing to stand in middle until the needy receive their due.

When Jesus tells his disciples to ask and seek and knock, he's not saying that they have to wake God up, but rather that there's something transformative about continually turning to God. In this example Jesus doesn't specify for what the person might be praying, only that the prayer must be persistent. Then calling on the experience of parents, he assures them that God would never test them with snakes or scorpions: God gives only good. The longer and harder they ask and knock, the better the chance that they will come to recognize what God is offering them
